Introduction

The demands placed on today's facilities—from homes to commercial buildings—have never been greater. For those involved in initial construction or modernization of these residential and commercial buildings, the challenges are equally demanding.

Advances in technology, energy-conscious owners, codes, staffing, training, supplier service—the list seems endless of the things that must constantly occupy your mind. Product quality and availability, however, should never be on that list.

One company—Continental Industries—stands apart in an unwavering commitment to having the right product in the right place at the right time.

With roots to 1892, we are a privately held pioneer in the design and production of air distribution products and venting solutions for residential and commercial applications. We design and manufacture all products in the U.S.A.

Continental—Then

Like other American success stories, Continental began with the dream of an entrepreneur, David Leiter. He first took over a line of register products specifically designed for the manufactured housing segment (Metaline, founded in 1955). As the market demanded a broader product offering, Continental Register was born. Ensuing years led to much product development in grilles, registers, and diffusers (GRDs). Today, Continental continues to serve the industry with both of these lines.

In 1979 Continental acquired A&A Register of Cleveland, Ohio. It had been founded by George Auer who earlier (1892) had founded the Auer Register Company. Interestingly, Continental later went on (in 1996) to acquire Auer Register as well.

Also by the 1990s, the market was demanding decorator-type products and, in response, Continental developed the Extr'ordinair designer series.

One company stands apart in an unwavering commitment to having the right product in the right place at the right time.

With this power lineup of GRDs, distribution partners began asking Continental for an even broader product offering. As a result, and in 2004, Continental completed the acquisition of AirJet Venting Systems of Fredericksburg, Virginia. AirJet had been founded as General Products Corporation in 1945 and, in 1952, began producing chimney and venting components for wood, coal, and oil-burning appliances.

Continental—Now

Today, Continental Industries represents a premier supplier of air distribution products and venting solutions. Despite growth, we remain privately held—charting our own fate by adhering to an established set of principles that have enabled our success through several decades:

- Never sacrifice quality
- Maintain design and manufacturing excellence
- Exceed delivery expectations
- Establish long-term customer relationships
- Provide conscientious customer service

Baseboard Diffusers & Grilles

Floor Registers & Grilles

Innovation in steel, aluminum, and composite plastic has long been a hallmark of Continental products.

Consider, for example, the patented design of the wraparound collar used in many of our floor, sidewall, and ceiling products. The design ensures rigidity, strength, and long-lasting reliability.

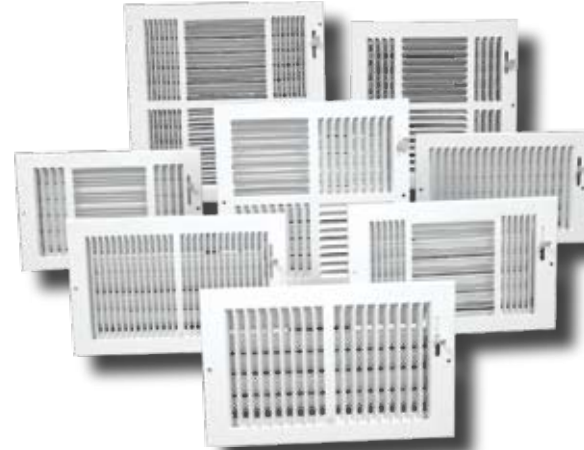

Innovations in plastic include the removable snap-in face plate of our round and square ceiling diffusers. This design, versatile enough for 6-, 7- or 8-inch flexible duct, offers a variety of throw patterns and provides for super-fast installation as well as a finished look.

On the commercial side, consider the patented design of our Surflo series of T-bar diffusers. The design enables air to be dispensed in a thin layer along the ceiling surface for optimal distribution.

Curved Blade Registers

All of our T-bar diffusers offer the convenience of damper adjustment through the diffuser face, standard seismic tabs, and versatile choices in throw patterns and plenums.

We invite you to make a side-by-side comparison of our residential and commercial products with any competitive offering. You'll discover that the look, the feel, and the performance are unmatched.

Despite this quality difference, our production efficiencies ensure an extremely cost competitive product and availability when you need it.

Make the switch to Continental and discover why we are "the register people."
